This week, we had the opportunity to do the second moderated retro. We used this perfect occasion to reflect on the past two semesters of working on our project Plandora.

After a quick “Tweet your sprint” intro, where we tried to conclude our current sprint in short, twitter-like sentences, we had a look at a couple of questions such as:

- Are you happy with your project outcome?
- How much did you learn during this Project?
- ...

Once everyone had time to think about the past weeks for themselves, we moved on to the group part of this retrospective. We teamed up with FileFighters to talk about our projects and learnings. We exchanged views on the things we thought went well, but also reflected upon drawbacks.

During the retrospective, we came across some problems that emerged last semester and noticed that we were able to work on those things. And after another three months, we can now put those problems in the “Things that went well” part.

So overall, we are extremely happy to say that we were able to put the measures we agreed on last retrospective into practice. Nevertheless, the “Things to improve” part was not empty this time either, as there is always room to improve!
